A Swedish submarine blocks off an area near the Musko naval base, south of Stockholm, as a helicopter searches for a submarine that military sources say has been detected in the area.

Swedes Continue Hunt For Mystery Submarine

STOCKHOLM - Swedish ships dropped depth charges Tuesday to force to the surface an unidentified submarine trapped near the country's most sensitive naval base. Some traces of oil have been spotted in the water, a military spokes-

"The oil spots do not necessarily mean that it has been damaged," said Admiral Christer Kierkegaard, who reported that the Swedish anthorities have had radar and hydrophone contact with the submarine. "It's not one of ours," a U.S. The search for the submarine began when military personnel re-

Further civilian and military reports indicated that a submarine was in the waters of the Stockholm archipelago, a chain of hundreds of small, scenic islands. The submarine is boxed in 10 miles from the open sea, between the navy's Musko base in the ar-chipelago and the mainland, a military spokesman said, and can only escape through two narrow passages in the rocks. According to a navy spokesman, radar and hydrophone instruments indicated that the vessel was close to the mainland, about 20 miles south of Stockholm.

"We have put up barriers" said a spokesman, Bertil Lagerwall, adding that "it will not be easy" for the vessel to slip away.

Radar equipment at Musko sweeps Sweden's east coast, which faces the Soviet Union across the A Soviet U-137 submarine, be-administration is urging Saudia Arabia to lend Egypt as much as $2 billion to manufacture U.S. warplanes for friendly countries in the Middle East and the Gulf, according to administration officials.

The plan calls for friendly Gulf states, such as Bahrain, to receive Northrop F-5G fighters, for example, from an Egyptian plant. The United States would provide designs, engineering and engines, keeping the most secret techniques under wraps while giving Egypt experience in manufacturing modern-fighter planes.

The administration hopes to strengthen U.S. ties to pro-Western Arab nations while giving them weapons to deter such countries as Iran. Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, in support-ing the rearmament effort for Mideast and Gulf countries, has stressed that Israel has nothing to fear, given Israel's overwhelming military superiority.

The administration's clearing the way for selling billions of dol-lars in weapons to Arab nations has sent U.S. defense contractors scrambling for position. For example, the Northrop Corp. and General Dynamics are fighting to be the supplier of the FX (fighter export) plane for the Gulf.

Northrop is offering its F-5G Tigershark, while General Dynamics is trying to sell a downgraded version of its F-16, called the F-16-

Palestinian Roundup Stirs Allied Concern

BEIRUT — The three Western nations of the peacekeeping force in Lebanoo were reported Tuesday to have expressed concern to President Amin Gemayel about the arbitrary arrests and poor treatment of Palestinians by the Lebanese

The sources said the three am-bassadors did not question the Lebanese government's authority to make the arrests but noted distress at reports on the way in which many Palestinians, in particular, were rounded up and the conditions in which they were being held pending interrogation.

NATO Debates Shift to Conventional Weapons

By Joseph Fitchert

International Herald Tribune PARIS - NATO has started a major strategic debate about whether a new generation of U.S. conventional weapons will enable the alliance to deter the Soviet Uoion while sharply reducing Western dependence on nuclear arms.

The new emphasis on conventional defense, of which the United States is the leading advocate, could help defuse the protests of anti-nuclear movements in Europe and the United States, but taxpay-BET CHAIN AN CHAIN ers would have to pay for slightly bigger defense budgets to ado-quately modernize Western conentional arsenals.

Summing up the U.S. view, a diplomat said: "NATO's nuclear doctrine is losing credibility because of public opposition in the West, so the allies should make the extra spending effort to acquire a credible conventional defense based on high technology." The plan would use highly accurate missiles to break up Soviet troop concentrations and allow NATO troops to counterattack against isolated Soviet units.

Bot the U.S. campaign alarms many European leaders. Although they would like to placate the antinuclear lobby, they worry about the extra costs of conventional forces and are apprehensive about a new doctrine of defense that involves nonnuclear missile strikes deep into Warsaw Pact territory. And France, which continues to invest heavily in nuclear weapons as an alternative to membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, is irritated to hear U.S. officials say that expensive, sophisticated conventional arms will dominate future battlefields.

The debate has emerged public-ly in statements by NATO's commander General Bernard Rogers, that NATO could dispense with most of its 6,000 short-range nuclear arms for battlefield use if allied governments would raise their delense spending by 4 percent a year for the rest of the 1980s.

The extra spending would allow NATO to invest in the new strateweapons, mainly precision-guided long-range missiles that can home able NATO to spot enemy troop concentrations fast and accurately.

This strategy, devised by the United States and known as Airland Battle 2000, aims to disrupt Soviet reinforcements before they eliminate the need for NATO to keep some nuclear arms as a weapin on targets deep behind Soviet on of last resort and part of West-lines. Western reconnaissance planes and computers would en-planes and computers would enom deterrence. echelon forces from the spearhead forces, Warsaw Pact commanders can have no reasonable prospect of deeply penetrating Western defenses, the new strategy says. Soviet military doctrine calls for waves of attackers to flow to the front, taking the place of Soviet frontline units that fall back as they are exhausted.

These new weapon systems, col-lectively, known as the Assault-Breaker concept, consist mainly of long-range missiles, known as "smart weapons" because their electronic guidance systems recognize targets and avoid decoys. As a missile arrives at its target area, it releases a set of smaller missiles, known as guided submunitions. that home in on individual targets such as tanks or field communications. Experts contend that a single missile of this type can destroy at least 60 percent of a Soviet squadron of 12 tanks.

Although the most sophisticated U.S. weapons are still in the planning stage, Israel's success with similar but simpler weapons against Syria's Soviet-made missiles and armor in Lebanon have tended to confirm the claims. Most experts acknowledge that the West has a commanding lead over the Soviet Union in electronic warfare that would give NATO an edge in The conventional strategy, its

would move to a "no-early-use" doctrine that approximates the "no-first-use" declaration that is being sought by mclear disarmament groups. General Rogers underscored the political ramifications recently when he said: "The anti-nuclear groups want the same things as I If NATO commits itself more heavily to conventional defense, it could then propose new nuclear disarmament talks on the obsolete short-range nuclear weapons. And it might expect the Soviet Union to seek conventional cutbacks in the long-stalled Vienna talks on mutual and balanced force reductions. Despite the apparent convergence between the NATO interest in conventional modernization and the disarmament movement's dis-

Traditionally, the United States an spending on conventional de-fenses, and the issue has gained momentum in recent NATO meetings because of wide objections to NATO's attempts to modernize its ouclear forces.

The heart of NATO's problem is that it has a military strategy that cannot be implemented." wrote Senator Sam Nunn, Democrat of Georgia, a respected congressional specialist on NATO, recently reporting on the alliance.

Under conditions of strategic parity, a NATO nuclear response to nonnuclear Soviet aggression in Europe would be a questionable strategy at best, a self-defeating one at worst," he wrote. Thus major responsibility for continued deterrence in Europe has shifted to NATO's outnumbered, outnumed and maldeployed conventional

Senator Nunn has urged the; Reagan administration to freeze any additional U.S. expenditure on NATO unless the alliance agrees to adopt a strategy along the lines of the U.S. military's concept of the Airland Battle. The new approach has already found wide accentance among most allied armies after bilateral military talks, but fense spending by 3 percent on top of inflation cutil 1986. So only an additional 1 percent would be surface before the NATO summit in December, when the United

The Airland Battle, as outlined by military officers attending a recent meeting of the European-American Strategie Research Workshop organized by strategist Albert Wohlstetter, involves shifting NATO away from a Maginot-line-type static defense to a strong emphasis on counterattack Instead of trying to inflict heavy casualties on Soviet troops while waiting for U.S. reinforcements, the Airland battle approach calls for NATO troops to give ground slowly while decimating the second

European apprehensions about this approach center on the new tactics' emphasis on striking deep — and quickly — into Eastern Eu-rope and perhaps even the Soviet Union. Such "cross-border" operations are not part of NATO's traditional defensive tactics.

echeions of the Warsaw Pact

In addition, to be effective, NATO would probably have to start firing its missiles—for exam-ple, conventional Pershing-2 and cruise missiles - almost simultaneously with the start of a Soviet offensive. This hair-trigger response poses problems of political control over military operations, experts say.

The advantage, however, is that highly accurate new missiles would enable NATO to do the job - destroying armor, airfields and communications - with conventional warheads instead of needing highhiast nuclear weapons to be sure of destroying the target. . In discussions about these new trends in warfare, European officials at recent informal discussions such as the annual meeting of the International Institute for Strategic Studies have indicated a preference for the United States to put less emphasis on the novelty of its oew arms and tactics. Instead, European spokesmen said, it would be politically safer to emphasize that conventional options have always been part of NATO's deterrent strategy, thus trying to avoid unsettling public debate.

Top Solidarity Leader utmost importance for Europe's Is Arrested in Poland

By Michael Dobbs

Washington Post Service
WARSAW — Military authorities announced Tuesday night the arrest of one of the top underground leaders of Solidarity a few days before the independent trade union's expected dissolution.

The main evening televisioo oews bulletin named the Solidarity official as Wladyslaw Frasyniuk, 28, leader of the union's Wroclaw region in southwestern Poland. He was charged by a military prosecutor with organizing illegal demonstrations and other protests against martial law, Mr. Frasyniuk managed to avoid arrest when martial law was declared Dec. 13 and went inm hiding in the Wroclaw area. He was one of four senior Solidarity officials who formed a provisional coordinating commission in April to run the union's affairs while the remainder of its elected leaders were interped.

Mr. Frasyniuk's arrest marks a major success for the martial law authorities as they prepare for an important session of the Sejm, or parliament, on Saturday that will discuss the dissolution of Solidarity and other trade unions. It could severely undermine the effectiveoess of protests against a new trade union law that parliament is expected to pass.

Solidarity's Wroclaw regioo was regarded as one of the most radical in Poland and the source of the most determined opposition to the military regime. Local residents said that the underground seemed much better organized there than in other parts of the country and that Mr. Frasyniuk had been in personal touch with Solidarity supporters in the factories.

Solidarity's underground leadership is made up of union officials from Warsaw, Gdansk, Krakow and Wroclaw who have held an avFrasyniuk's arrest will make it more difficult for the remaining underground leaders to meet and could explain why the provisional commission has not yet reacted publicly to the government's proposed trade union law.

Swaziland's Byzantine Royal Succession: 'We've Baffled the World'

By Joseph Lelyveld New York Times Service

MBABANE, Swaziland -This independent black kingdom, which is clamped in a vise between white-ruled South Africa and Marxist Mozambique, is undergoing the first royal suc-cession it has experienced in this century as tribal elders try to fill the political and cultural vacuft by the death six weeks ago of King Sobbuza II. Gentle in manner but zealous in his defense of traditional values and rites, King Sobhuza managed to embody a remarkshle compromise between tribal statecraft and contemporary

His traditional statecraft was largely based on a complex pattern of kinship ties between the royal house and the leading Swazi clans that left the king, at a conservative estimate, with about 70 wives and 150 offspring. Tradition dictated that, in order to avoid intrigue, there Queen Mother, 'Authorized Person' Play Key Roles After Death of the King could be no crown prince. Now British at the time of independ-

The identity of the new king will not be revealed, it appears, until the end of the official mourning period. Several weeks ago all Swazis were ordered to shave their heads as a gesture of respect for King Sobhuza. Now their hair is growing back, and life is slowly returning to the unhurried rhythms that represent the norm across Swaziland's green and rolling landscape.

Only foreigners can be heard to speculate about the succession or the durability of the institutions bequeathed by the king. Swaziland experienced labor unrest and party politics before King Sobhuza proclaimed a state of emergency nine years ago and scrapped the constitu-tion that was left behind by the night he was convinced that six ci-

Because of his prestice, this was generally accepted as a restoration of a natural Swazi order, but among urban youth and government officials there remained a lateat resentment not of the king but of various princes and courtiers who seemed to be enriching themselves under the sovereign's benign protection.
This resentment could become a political force again, but the trauma of the king's death has momentarily stilled political talk among the 600,000 Swazis within the kingdom's borders. "I think they all feel like orphans," a diplomat said. But it may also be that Swazis recognize that the succession has largely been ac-

The complex arrangements, dictated by custom and the need to avoid strife among the more forceful and ambitious of Sobhuza's elder sons, might be summed up by a formula like this: The King is dead. Long live the Authorized Person.

The anthorized person, it has been announced, will act on be-half of a 16-member royal council, called the Liqoqo, and the meen mother. Traditionally, Swaziland has been a dual monarchy in which responsibility is shared between a king known as the Ngwenyama, or Lion, and the Ndlovukszi, or She-Elephant, as the queen mother is called.

When the king dies, the She-Elephant reigns. All that is gen-erally known by outsiders about the present queen mother is her name, which is Dzeliwe, and the fact that she was selected by King Sobhuza from among his wives for the role she must now play. Rumor has it that she is in her mid-50s, although she is said to look years older, and that she is literate in English, although she is never heard to speak it. The authorized person, who will act in her name, is a senior prince named Sozisa, who was generally unknown outside the traditional sector before he was identified in a proclamation. The expectation is that he will be the de facto regent for the better part of a decade, for it is all but certain that the new king is an adolescent, chosen from among

King Sobhuza's youngest sons.
The latest unconfirmed report, which can be regarded as better than a rumor but less than fact, is that his name is Makhosetive (according to a variant spelling, Makhosemvelo) and that he has already been sent overseas with his mother to be educated.

Foreign Minister Richard Dlamini would say only that the secret of the new king's identity would be kept until the Ligogo was ready to proclaim it. "We've haffled the world," he said, chuckling. "If it were your country, the secret would have been known while the child was still in the womb."

Although the succession has gone smoothly thus far, it re-mains possible that the tribal elders in the Liqoqo may have to face nontraditional demands as the economy slumps along with a declining sugar price. Among those who argue that a return to constitutional order is the only guarantee of a stable Swaziland is Ambrose Zwane, who led an opposition party before the state of emergency was declared. Otherwise, Mr. Zwane con-tended, Swaziland could eventually experience a worse upheaval than Jomo Kenyatta's successors recently faced in Kenya, when the lower ranks of the air force and some students denounced the privileged classes and made

UN Urges Iran, Iraq to End War; Tehran Rebuffs Security Council

By Bernard D. Nossirer New York Times Service

UNITED NATIONS, New York A unanimous Security Council called on Iran and Iraq on Monday night to stop shooting and withdraw their forces from each other's territory.

Iran boycotted the session and rejected the request before the 15-0 vote was taken. The Iranian delegate, Said Rajaie-Khorassani, said, "We do not recognize the legitima-cy of the resolution."

This left Iraq, which had called the meeting, able to paint Iran as defying the chief peacekeeping body of the United Nations.

The resolution itself took note of this, welcoming the fact that "ooe of the parties" has said it would cooperate with the request and urging "the other to do like-wise." The United States and other members tried to delete this language on the ground that it was one-sided, but they succeeded only in removing the names of Iran and Iraq from the text.

Iraq's foreign minister, Sasdun Hamadi, said Baghdad had al-ready pulled all its troops out of Iran, would accept a cease-fire and submit the dispute to arbitration by the Security Council. He accused Iran of historically seeking "power and domination" over Iraq and the Gulf nations. The chosen instrument now, he said, is "the export of revolution," the Moslem fundamentalism of Ayatollah Rubollah Khomeini.

Mr. Hamadi said Iran's latest attempts to penetrate Irag's borders and overthrow the Baghdad regime have "all failed miserably." Iran, he said, "stands alone in this policy, drawing sympathy from none but Israel."

Angola Denies Cuba Pullout Accord

UNITED NATIONS, New York - Paulo Jorge, the foreign minister of Angola, denied Tuesday U.S. claims that his government had accept ed the principle of a withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola and that only the timetable remained. Mr. Jorge, who met later with Secretary of State George P. Shultz, said at a news conference that he hoped that South-West Africa, which is also known as Namibia, would become independent during 1983. If this were to happen, Mr. Jorge said, agreement on the principles for independence would have to be organized in the coming weeks as implementation of an accord is expected to take several months.

The Rengan administration has made a Namibian settlement the cornerstone of its African policy and has portrayed agreement on withdrawal of the Cubans from neighboring Angola as the only major obstacle to a settlement.

A Cuban withdrawal, which South Africa is said to be demanding in technically not a part of the direct discussions on Namibian independence. Angola insists that the future of the Cuban troops is strictly a subject between Luanda and Havana.

Production of Tylenol Is Suspended

CHICAGO — Johnson & Johnson has suspended production of Extra-Strength Tylenol because of the deaths of seven persons by cyanide contained in capsules of the medicine.

Investigators conducted more than 200 interviews and checked a "sea of red-topped bottles" for clues in the killings of seven in the Chicago area who took the capsules. The deaths prompted nationwide warnings against taking the pain reliever. Volunteers in Chicago spread warnings to shut-ins, elderly and non-English speaking residents who still might be unaware of the danger. Leaflets were distributed in Spanish, Vietnamese Polish and other languages. Overseas, the Philippines ordered the recall of all capsules and Guatemala banned their sale.

At the same time, the manufacturers said that strychnine was found in two bottles of Tylenol in Oroville, California, and one person who took the medication became ill but recovered. There is no evidence the discorery is related to the deaths in the Chicago area, a spokesman said.

2 Iran Hijackers Reportedly Seized

ABU DHABf - Two Iranian hijackers seeking political asylum were azed when their commandeered military plane was forced to return to Iran after four Mideast countries shut their airports to it, an Iranian official said Tuesday.

Javad Ansari, the Iranian consul general in Dubai, who took part in negotiations with the hijackers, said that the C-130 landed Monday afternoon at Bandar Abbas, Iran, at the mouth of the Gulf and that the three hostage crew members were safe. Mr. Ansari said that the hijackers were noncommissioned officers and that one of them had been accompanied by his wife and teen-age son. He said they were taken into custody and would be put on trial.

After the plane took off from Dubai Monday, authorities in Knwait, Oman, Lebanna and Dubai refused to let it land. Gulf diplomatic sources said that Iranian Air Force jets had entered the air space of the United Arab Emirates to force the plane back to Iran.

PARIS — The police said Tuesday they were investigating allegations that Moroccan secret agents kidnapped a Moroccan woman opponent of King Hassan II in France.

Moroccan exiles and friends of the woman, Khadija Allaonah-Bourquat, 37, said she vanished from her home east of Paris on Sept. 27 after eaving to visit the dentist. They access the Moroccan secret police. Political exiles said they will ask President Francois Mitterrand to cancel a visit to Morocco Oct. 27.

The French police said they had opened an inquiry. Police sources said she made a desperate telephone call to police on the day of the dental appointment but it was cut off and nothing had been heard since Mrs. Allaouah-Bourouat, a Moroccan-born French citizen and distant relative of the king, formed a group to defend prisoners in Morocco and pressed the French government to intervene on behalf of her three brothers, arrested in Rabat in 1973 and not heard of since.

U.S. Wants Its Citizens to Tattle: Hot Line Seeks Reports on Fraud

New York Times Service WASHINGTON — Centuries ago, when citizens of Venice wanted to inform their government about a neighbor's wrongdoing, they could drop an anonymous note into the mouth of one of many conveniently situated stone lions.

Now the Department of Health and Human Services has set up its own stone lion in the form of a nationwide, toll-free teleg number. Operators in the inspector-general's office will take information about fraud and waste in the department's programs, which include Medicare, Medicaid and Social Security.

In the past two years, more than 5,900 federal workers and taxpayers have used a local Washington number for such complaints. About 10 percent of the complaints resulted in some sort of remedial action, including one case in which a federal administrator and two contractors who skimmed $567,000 from inflated Medicare navments were seen to all the property was seen to all the property and the property was seen to all the property was seen to all the property and the property was seen to all the property was seen to all the property and the property was seen to all the property and the property Medicare payments were sent to jail.

These are only the more superficial changes at the White House this fall as the president and his staff seek to refute the suggestion that Mr. Reagan is too friendly to the wealthy and too indifferent to the poor and unemployed.

Despite opinion polls showing that Americans remain hopeful about his economic program, Reagan aides are worried that the "fauness" issue has taken its toil, especially as Democrats charge that adminis-tiation anti-inflation policies have put people out of

Mr. Reagan's advisers are thus trying to defuse the perception of the president hobnobbing with millionaire friends. They are looking for ways to project a sense of caring about jobs, and about the problems of average Americans, while Mr. Reagan asks them to

"Let's face it, we don't have a lot of arrows in our quiver," one White House official said privately.

Mr. Reagan, according to White House officials, is projecting his views in several ways.

Not only are black-tie dinners, riding breeches and other trappings of the rich out, but the White House is also attempting to think positively. Monday, for example, Mr. Reagan was in Columbus, Ohio, to campaign for Republicans and hunch with workers in

"You've got to be very careful with symbolism because it can look too hokey," said a White House official, "Reagan can't go spend a night at the home of a coal miner. It wouldn't be credible,"

Mr. Reagan is also endorsing legislation to produce jobs. Last week, he opened his news conference by calling for passage of an "export trading bill" that he said would create "several hundred thousand new jobs without costing taxpayers a cent." This was apparently the first time Mr. Reagan had

The administration also recently endorsed a bill it had opposed to grant tax credits to computer compa-nies that donate computers to schools.

In another tactic, Mr. Reagan has larely refused to concede what an aide called "the moral high ground" to his critics. He has charged that Democrats favor a "compassion" and "fairness" that is meretricious,

"You can't create a desert, hand a person a cup of water and call that compassion," he said in Rich-mond, Virginia, last week. "You can't pour billions of dollars into dead-end, make-work jobs and call that opportunity. You can't build up years and years of degrading dependence by our citizens on the government and then dare to call that hope. And believe me, you can't drive our people to despair with prices that wipe them out or taxes which sap their energies, and then boast that you have given them fairness.

On the unemployed, one White House official said: The people who are unemployed won't be for us. We've got to aim our message to the people who have jobs, and convince them that they're better off than before because we have brought down inflation."

Mr. Reagan uses almost every speech these days to drive home the message that he cares. Last week, looking grim, he told his Richmond audience: "Words cannot tell how painful it is to me that each day for millions of Americans is one of hurt and indignity because they want to work and can't." Deeply anxious about the potential political impact of the unemployment statistics due to be released Oct. 8, administration officials have said repeatedly that an increase in the jobless rate from 9.8 percent in August to 10 percent or more for September is likely. In medical terms, it's called inoculation," said a Reagan strategist. Lobbying Over U.S. Cargo Planes Intensifies

Navy in U.S. Will Buy

By Charles Mohr

New York Times Service WASHINGTON -- Opponents of a Pentagon plan to spend about $10 billion to buy 50 C-5B cargo airplanes have said that a new, more versatile plane could be produced almost as rapidly and at a lower ultimate cost.

These critics charged Monday that the air force was seeking ways to sign a C-5B contract with Lockheed Corp. quickly, before more adverse comment on the cost, delivery schedules and performance of the aircraft is made.

The plane, a modified version of Lockheed's C-5A Galaxy that has been designated the C-5B, was anthorized by Congress in August after fierce lobbying. The purchase was planned to meet a shortage of planes with the ability to carry a rapid deployment force to trouble

However, a congressional official who asked not to be quoted by name disclosed Monday that an air force report to a Senate committee said last month that a new-ren, more versatile design of a heavy cargo plane, the C-17, could be made operational only three made operational only three months later than the C-5B, if a contract for the C-5B was delayed until oext year.

Defense Secretary Caspar W.
Weinberger and Deputy Secretary Frank C. Carincci, who decided in January to buy the C-5Bs, argued that the Lockheed purchase would save vital time and be more cost

An expert associated with the C-5B program, who asked not to be identified and who is what in Washington is called a "whistle blower," analyzed similar data and said that "the delivery schedules for the C-5B and the C-17 are now practically the same." The expert gued that "the rationals for the C-5B has now evaporated."

An air force spokesman who works in the rapid deployment program said for his service that the difference in delivery dates for the C-17s and C-5Bs "has decreased markedly." It was originally estimated that the C-5Bs could be delivered three years earlier than the C-17s, which would be produced by McDonnell Douglas Corp. This officer said the difference in delivery dates was "now 16 to 18 months

PARIS - The Soviet Union currently employs 20,000 people inside Russia and ahroad identifying and attempting to buy or steal ad-vanced Western technology oced-ed by its armed forces, a senior U.S. official said Tuesday.

The U.S. land-based Minuteman missile force would still be in-vulnerable to Soviet attack if Soviet agents had not succeeded in obtaining Western technology, which enabled Russia to improve the accomey and power of its own nuclear missile force, the official said. He also revealed that U.S. intelligence indicates that Western know-how plays an important role in 150 Soviet weapons systems. The U.S. official briefed reporters at the end of a two-day meeting of North Atlantic Treaty Organizadon delegates in Paris that had been called to consider the Reagan administration's demand for a sharp tightening of controls on the flow of valuable technology to the Soviet Union and its allies.

At the meeting of the Coordinating Committee on the NATO strategie embargo, known as Co-Com, the United States pressed for a big increase in the oumber of banned items and technologies, tougher enforcement procedures and a closer cooperation between the allies, the official said. To help make its case, the United States brought a Soviet sonar huoy used for detecting allied submarines and showed the committee that its micro-electric circuitry is based on American technology.

The committee — which comprises all NATO countries, except liceland, and Japan — agreed to review the existing NATO embargo list to see what changes should be made. The review is expected to last several mooths, officials said.

The U.S. team was lead by Richard D. Perle, assistant secretary of defense, and the newly appointed assistant secretary of state for economic and business affairs, Richard McCormick.

After the meeting, U.S. officials said there was a general consensus start of an eight-day visit.

Bonn Keeps Same Policy On Pipeline

Companies Can Fulfill Contracts With Russia

> By John Tagliabue New York Times Service

BONN - Senior officials of the new Christian Democratic government of Chancellor Helmut Kohl have indicated that they would do nothing to hinder companies from fulfilling contracts for the new So-

A Foreign Ministry official said
Monday that Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, who held the same post in the Social Democratic government of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, would tell Secretary of State George P. Shultz at a meeting Tuesday in New York that the new Bonn government did not intend to alter the policy on Soviet trade.

In a statement of policy on relations with the Soviet bloc, Mr. Kohl said West Germany would be a reliable partner in relations with the Eastern countries.

The remarks came less than a week after AEG-Kanis, a subsidiary of AEG-Telefunken, the electrical products concern, delivered the first two of 47 pipeline turbines that it had contracted to make for the Soviet Union. The U.S. Department of Commerce has said that it will impose sanctions on the company similar to those imposed on Dresser-France, and John Brown of Britain, two other pipeline contractors.

The West German Foreign Min-istry official said that Mr. Genscher would refterate the position that er would reiterate the position that U.S. sanctions against European companies that disregard the embargo against supplying pipeline equipment built with American parts and technology were "politically inappropriate, and objectionable under international law."

The Correspondents Provide an Outlet for the Desperate, and the Daffy, of Moscow

OSCOW — "Hello, bello," the voice says, an urgent note detectable over the static that is a regular accompaniment of telephone calls in Moscow.

Establishing that he has reached a Western correspondent, the caller surges on. "I like to meet you, please," he says. "We must talk." So begins another of the furtive encounters that are part of the routine for Western report-from Soviet citizens who have a story to tell about official injustice, high-handedness or corruption. The caller or his family is usually the victim in the tale, and contact with a foreign reporter apparently constitutes a last hope

In a little over a year, one reporter has talked to 20 or 30 people with hard-luck stories. Among them was an evangelical Christian from a small town outside Moscow who had efforts to proselytize. Others were doctors, scientists and musicians who lost their jobs after applying to emigrate.

The callers have cause to be nervous. They must assume that they are talking simulta-neously into the tape recorders of the Soviet secret police, the KGB. Callers have been seized on the street before their Western contacts arrived for a meeting, and some have ended up in labor camps.

In most cases the penalties appear to be less plaints, the caller's name may only be posted in the files, or he or she may be summoned to KGB beadquarters for a gentle warning.

Every encounter, however, takes place in an atmosphere of threat. The provision of the criminal code dealing with anti-Soviet agitation is broad enough to encompass the case of anyone who takes complaints against officialdom to the Western press.

For the reporter, too, there are risks. While anonymous callers can open a window on a closed society, every call is a potential trap, since the KGB makes a practice of slipping in "ringers" among those with genuine com-

Many callers assume that a Western correspondent comes to Moscow to fight for Western ideals and to enlist in human rights strug-gles. It is difficult to persuade a Russian that this is not part of a correspondent's job. In addition, hope can turn to bitterness when a correspondent explains that he is sympathetic, but that the story told him is not news or reveals nothing particularly significant about the country.

Other cases are harder to sort out. A few months ago this correspondent was pursued down the street outside his apartment building by a man with trench-coat collar turned up against the wind, dark glasses and a snap-brim hat. When the man followed him into a dimly lit underpass, it seemed like time to shoo him

NEW YORK — They were four men who had barely known each other who had been sent to retrieve a yacht abandoned in Athens when martial law was imposed in Po-land. One by one, they decided not to go home.

Instead, they sailed across the Atlantic in a boat usually manned by a crew of seven and docked in a port they had never seen, all on the strength of the telephone number of some friends who might be able to help them get started in the United States. When they landed they were jailed. But six days later, they were granted asylum and freed to find homes and jobs and a new life.

It sounds like the story of a daring escape with a happy ending. And so it is, in some ways. But what emerges from the account given by Jarek Neczek-Hruzewicz, the only one of the four who speaks English fluently, is also a story of agonizing decision, of men who have left behind families, lost their jobs and perhaps their professions, men who are a bit frightened and very lonely.

"We are upset all the time," Mr. Neczak-Hruzewicz said Saturday night as he sat in a small bar here. Beside him was a brown paper. bag full of sausage and other meat that some-one had given him to take home.

"This is not four tough guys having an adventure," he said. The youngest one of us is 34. At that age you have usually reached a plateau in your life, in your family life and your professional life. There are settled things. Now there are none."

Mr. Neczak-Hruzewicz, a soft-spoken man who taught chemistry in Poland, has found work repairing roofs at a wage of $6 an hour. He has never done that kind of work but he says that he is adept with his hands and he is grateful for the job. "It was the best offer I got," he said. "A

Two of the men — Stanley Kozack, 38, and Andrzej Bienkowski, 34 — have been sharing a friend's living-room floor. Mr. Neczak-Hruzewicz, 38, and Andrzej Plewik, 37, the ship's captain, are staying with another friend. The $500 they each started out with has been

Like Mr. Neczak-Hruzewicz, Mr. Plewik, also a chemist, has found work repairing roofs. Mr. Kozack, a waiter, is doing ironwork in a shop. Mr. Bienkowski, who was an electrician, is still looking for work.

The five men flew from Lublin to Athens in April where they spent two weeks repairing the boat. At first they sailed as if returning home, stopping in Malta, Italy, Tunisia and Algeria. The trip was supposed to be a vacation, and the men did not discuss whether they would go back to Poland.

Mr. Neczak-Hrozewicz sald that he had been a professor of chemistry at the Maria Curie-Sklodoswkr University in Lublin and had been the head of the Solidarity independent union at the Institute of Chemistry. It seemed inevitable to him that he would be jailed had he remained in Poland. The others were also members of Solidarity, but Mr. Neczak-Hruzewicz would what to do." Using maps and charts they had bought in Gibraltar, the men arrived at a small recreational pier in Elizabeth at about 7:30 A.M. on Sept. 16 hoping to call their friends nearby and then decide what to do. But the friends were not home and, meanwhile, a small crowd formed. Two police officers, who had parked nearby to fill out a theft report, came over to investigate and called immigration authorities.

The men spent six days in the Brooklyn Detention Center that Mr. Neczak-ruzewicz called "an experience and a lesson in history, Ominous Budget News ...

his presidency, Ronald Reagan gave Congress his first budget proposals, which were for the fiscal year just ended. He vowed to break the growth of spending, slash taxes and shrink the deficit

When the books were closed last week, they showed that in those terms fiscal 1982 was a disaster. The final accounting will show about $730 billion of spending — up $35 billion from Mr. Reagan's original plan. The revenue total will be close to $620 billion — $30 billion less than he had projected. And the bottom-line deficit was $110 billion, more than double the president's original forecast.

More than anything, these numbers reveal the impact of the recession. The first Reagan fiscal year ended so deeply in the red because of economic conditions, which in some mea-sure can be blamed on the administration's policies and miscalculations. From the start, Mr. Reagan's assumptions for economic growth were too optimistic and his revenue assumptions were inflated. Nor did his administration properly anticipate the effects of tight monetary policy, which increased the in-terest cost on federal borrowings and has been a major factor in the length and depth

High unemployment raised the cost of unemployment compensation and, along with weak profits, bit heavily into tax collections. Perversely, the revenue estimates were also Reaganomics would bring inflation down from double-digit heights.

The more interesting and ominous, point is that the fiscal 1982 figures do not reflect the administration's dramatic shift in public priorities. Despite all the furor over the defense buildup, military spending in fiscal 1982 was only $3 billion higher than in Jim-my Carter's budget for the same period, as oposed a few days before his term ended. The big Reagan increases are on the way, but only in recent months have they begun to show up in budget figures.

The effect of the multibillion-dollar Reagan tax cut was also relatively small in fiscal 1982. Tax rate reductions did not affect the government's income nearly as much as the recession did.

Depressing as the figures on Mr. Reagan's first fixed year may be, we have not seen any-thing set. Those built-in commitments on tax cuts and military spending will show up big in next year's figures. Given the prospect of slow economic growth, they point to an even bigger deficit, bigger budget battles and more jitters in financial markets.

The country could have avoided this dismal swamp if the new president had been more realistic about the economy and the effects of his policies. He owes the nation and the world - some realism now.

- THE NEW YORK TIMES.

... and Cries of 'Unfair'

Word has apparently reached the White House that some people think the Reagan economic program is unfair. True to bureautors and savers. cratic reflex, the White House staff has responded with a 75-page briefing book to assist the president and his surrogates in countering this shocking thought.
The counteroffensive has already been evident in the president's recent news conference and speeches. The briefers' statistics, however selective, may be more impressive than the president's rendition of them. But it appears that the whole enterprise is doomed by the fact that the president's program is not fair, in the sense that its burdens and benefits are very unevenly distributed.

The Reagan program has three major features — tax cuts, budget cuts and increased military spending. The obvious beneficiaries have been defense contractors and those upper-bracket taxpayers for whom tax cuts have far exceeded the offsetting effect of bracket creep. The obvious losers are the poor, especially the working poor, and millions of unemployed and discouraged workers caught up in the current deep recession.

The administration's fairness rebuttal argues that the poor are not really worse off because the Democrats' Great Society programs did not help them anyway; the poor were hurt more by inflation; and the inflation resulted from the big deficits caused by social welfare spending.

It is not a good argument. In the first place, arguing that the billions spent on food, bealth and welfare programs did not help people is fatnous. The poor - many of whom are elderly or disabled persons or children may still be with us, but they are much less standards. Of course inflation hurt the poor,

As for the link between deficit spending and inflation, one would think that this administration — which is running deficits far larger than did its predecessors — would show a decent hesitancy in pushing that argument. The administration's loose fiscal policy has made it necessary for the Federal Reserve to keep a tight rein ou the money supply to keep inflation from spurting upward. And tight money has produced the one economic benefit to which the administration proudly points - lower inflation.

But fighting inflation in this way is very costly in terms of unemployment, more costly, it turns out, each time the trade is made. Inflation is now running around 6 percent, but unemployment is pushing 10 percent. The last time inflation was in this range, in 1976, memployment was about 7.5 percent. In 1969, with inflation at 6 percent, unemployment was only 3.5 percent. And while lower inflation benefits almost everyone to a degree, the price of unemployment falls heavily on certain people, who naturally wonder why they and their families have been singled out for the dubious honor of making everyone else better off.

If the administration wants to argue about fairness — and the wisdom of that is itself open to dispute — it should admit squarely that there have been gainers and losers from its program — and that the two are not generally the same. It can then argue that this situation should be tolerated for the long-term benefits that it believes will spring from its programs. That

Yet there is never a dearth of soldiers who would cut it down. This is all the more true because a socialist government may be elected at the end of this month, for the first time since 1936. In the Spanish political memory, 46 years is not so long. But if, this time, a Christian Democrat government of the cen-ter-right can be ejected without provoking a military counteraction, it will be a great milestone in Spanish history.

The army is still seen by superannuated generals and bitter, passed-over colonels not only as a social security system for the sons of the men who marched with Franco to usurp the republic in the '30s, but also as the final arbiter of what is good for Spain. These arrogant and parasitical pensioners take the view that, because democracy has patently failed to extinguish dissent but, on the contrary, appears to encourage it, the time has come to restore military rule.

The present government's commendable diligence in moving against the alleged plotters makes up for its carelessness in allowing free access to the jailed perpetrators of the last coup attempt. The next govern-ment's priorities must include a reform of the military from the top downward.

But by maintaining a similar line to that of Mr. Schmidt, at least militarily, Mr. Kohl's government risks being in greater difficulty than that of his predecessor. The Social Dem-ocrats, to be sure, had not succeeded in neutralizing the pacifist and anti-American current, but the SPD's left wing, at least, listened closely enough to those voices to channel part of this tendency. The Formidable Array of Problems Facing the Wily Mr. Kohl

WASHINGTON — You could argue that the 13-year-old West German coalition government - Helmut Schmidt's Social Democrats and the faithless Free Democrat minority — succembed to overexposure, fired blood, the ague of internal chills and fevers. What with a stagnant economy, ragged relations with the Western alliance, the dashing of detente's best hopes, you would thus expect the Germans to turn to something dynamically new.

You would expect, that is, a substantial transformation of the German political scene. Judging from the gleeful hand-rubbing in White House circles, you might also expect some significant improvement in German-American relations: on the Soviet gas pipeline, on military issues, on a common approach to the Soviet Union, on economic policy. The new chancellor, Helmnt Kohl, is some 20 years younger than his predecessor; he is a wily politician, avowedly "pro-American," a stannch alliance man. He and his associates are not given to any of those socialist-neutralist hang-ups that made Mr. Schmidt such a trial for the Reagan true believers.

And yet, you would be hard put to find, in the unique process that brought Germany's change of government, what might be called a

The "constructive no-confidence" vote that turned out Mr. Schmidt and brought in the Christian Democrats in coalition with the flipflop Free Democrats, is entirely constitutional. It was designed for precisely the kind of politi-cal mess that West Germany had gotten itself into. But this has not stopped the storm of criticism that it was somehow immoral or un-Christian to deny the electorate their voice.

That is one handicap that Mr. Kohi starts out with.

He must count, moreover, on the support of a Pree Democratic Party that itself has been sorely weakened, not only by the look of rank opportunism in its change of partners but also by its sorry showing in recent state voting. And just as Mr. Schmidt was in chronic conflict with his own party's left, Mr. Kohl does not have what you might call a cozy collaborator in the feisty, rightist leader of the Christian Demo-crats Bavarian wing, Franz Josef Strauss.

And then there are the Greens. This footloose, freewheeling amalgam of pacifist, neutralist, environmentalist, anti-establishment

But it does have a growing following and a real potential for replacing the Free Democrats as a coalition power broker if the Free Democrats cannot recover their strength.

All of this argues for the full use of Mr. Kohl's vaunted manipulative skills as a domestic politicism.

He needs to gather momentum — quickly. He must be seen to be dealing with the formidable fiscal problems he confronts, with unemdable fiscal problems he controlled, with uncarployment, and with a whole host of strong emotional, ideological and political undercurrents rolling the younger generation in West Germany. For many reasons that may not be of his own making this may prove to be impossible.
On the other hand, had Helmut Schmidt hung on beyond the eight years be had already served as chancellor, the prospect was almost certainly one of slow disintegration, a wider polarization between left and right, creeping government paralysis. There might also have been a worsening in relations with the United States.

Where Mr. Schmidt often treated Ronald Reagan as a schoolmaster might treat a slowwitted student, Mr. Kohl will probably be far more compatible.

But most of the wiser heads in Washington seriously doubt that this will bring anything more than marginal changes in substance; a lit-tle more enthusiasm for deployment of theater nuclear forces in Europe late next year, if no controls on these weapons have been negotiared with the Russians by that time, perhaps a little more readiness to finesse the masty trans-Atlantic fight over the Soviet pipeline with an agreement among all NATO members to take a tougher line in the future ou trade with the

Had there been a quick election, the conse-quences could have been even more chaotic, with the FDP effectively wiped out as a national political force, and the essentially rudderless Greens a factor that would somehow have to be reckoned with.

The alternative that was taken will give the new government time to consolidate its posi-tion before the new elections to which it has committed itself, presumably early next year. It was the wisest, safest choice. But when you have said that, in full contemplation of the alternatives, you have not said much.

WASHINGTON - Détente-niks

Don't believe it. The new Helmut is a spirited, shrewd and determined political figure who understands how his predecessor undermined the At-lantic Alliance, and who has a good grasp of which side of the superpower looks at him askance, and Washington with new hope.

Détente-niks at home and abroad are wishfully thinking that the new chancellor will stick to economic matters and not seek to have any impact in foreign affairs. They are mistaken; after imital obeisance to continuity, Mr. Kohl - aided by the brilliant hardliner, Franz Josef Strauss - will move to correct the dangerous drift toward neutralism-through-trade.

What does this mean for the Siberian pipeline, the great symbol of oneway detente, through which the West Germans are financing the technolog-ical buildup of the Soviet Union? "We in the CDU-CSU took a skeptical view of the gas deal," Mr. Kohl said in February. Since the events in Poland, our skepticism has grown. We feared that this gas deal would have disastrous psychological implications in the West, and especially in the U.S. - but none of our warning were given due consideration."

Obviously, events proved Mr. Kohl right: Mr. Schmidt's craven and greedy insistence on business-as-usaafter the Soviet smashing of Solidarity led many Americans to ques-tion the resolve of the West Germans. Nobody expects the new chancellor placed in office by the defection of

SECOND THOUGHT ... Tainted Relationships With Guinea's President

L ONDON — There has to be some pragmatism when Western countries deal with human rights issues in the Third World and Eastern Europe. We are all the wiser for Jimmy Carter's attempt to make those issues an instrument of Western diplomacy. It is a fact of life that where Western strategic or economic interest is important, the other side has leverage and can compel the West to moderate its critical stance. Nonetheless, judging from a report published Wednesday by Amnesty International, the London-based human rights organization, it is difficult to justify President François Mitterrand's decision to host Guinea's president, Ahmed Sékou Toure, last month in Paris, or President Ronald Reagan's

Mr. Touré is the longest-running African tyrant.

Is Guinea may not be as ugly as Idi Amin's Uganda or the Central African Empire of Jean-Bedel Bokassa, but for sustained longevity of imprisonment on false terms, random execution and torture, he has no peer.

The welcoming hand extended first by the White House and then the Elysée is predicated on two considerations. First, Guinea is rich in minerals. It has one of the world's largest bauxite mines and is an important source of diamonds and, potentially, of oil. Second, after a long period of being close to the Soviet Union, it is now determined to align itself with the West.

Mr. Touré now even votes with Morocco on the vexed issue of the status of the Western Sabara, which puts him firmly in the conservative fold. The truth of the matter is that even if the West rebuffed Guinea, it is unlikely to go back to the Soviet camp. The Russians, although they made use of Guinea as a port of call for reconnaissance patrols over the South Atlantic, made no great effort to keep Guinea happy. They paid for Guinea's bauxite at rates well below the market and they showed no interest in committing resources to the country's development.

As for Guinea's mineral deposits, the West has reasonable access to them already, and to step up the rate of production would demand an enormous investment in Guinea's rundown infrastructure. Guinea should be left to bang on its own petard little longer. After all, Mr. Touré is adept at leaving those with whom he has a quarrel hanging in the wind. Eleven years ago I arrived in Conakry to observe the National Revolutionary Assembly "trying" hundreds of Guineans, including former cabinet officers. The mass arrests had followed an invasion mounted by dissident Guineans and the Portuguese Army. I was met at the airport by a gov-crament official who insisted that "I take my time and have a cool, fresh orange juice."

Then I was escorted to a luxurious limousine, informed the trials were over, the verdict given, the appeals heard and rejected, and that there in front of me, suspended by their necks from a bridge over the road, were the executed. Later I learned these were the "lucky" ones.

The "unlucky" had had no trial at all and were executed by the hundred inside the prisons. The trials had been gross. The accused were not allowed to be present at their hearing. There was no defense counsel. The prisoners' confessions were broadcast daily over the radio. Ismael Toure, a government minister and, like so many senior offi-cials, a close relative (in this case, a brother) of the president, declared to the tribunal, "You have the enemy in your hands. Crush the vermin." In its report, Amnesty International says that few of the more than 3,000 people arrested at that time have been released. Many, perhaps most, have been executed extrajudicially while in prison. And the government, after receiving an Amnesty mission in December 1981, has reneged on a promise to provide information on 78 persons Amnesty believes may have been killed. Mr. Touré, since Guinea became independent in 1958, has been obsessed by "plots against the revolution." He has spoken often of a "permanent plot" to overthrow him and to install a government more favorable to the "imperialist powers, particularly France and West Germany."

Mr. Touré is unrepentant about what he has done. He may go out of his way to court the West and rebuff Moscow, but nothing he has said or done suggests that he wants to make amends for

Not only has he secretly had executed hundreds of persons, but Amnesty reports that he has al-lowed their deaths to be inflicted in a particularly long and drawn-out form called the "Diète Noire." It consists of depriving the prisoner of food and water until he dies, usually within 15 days.

The Annesty report says that "after intense thirst and burning sensations throughout the body, there is nausea, hallucinations and fierce pains in the stomach and intestinal area. According to witnesses, the screams and groans of dying prisoners could often be heard throughout the prison block." Although it is true that there have been no more mass arrests or widespread rights violations since 1976, random arrests and detentions continue. It is still the same man who runs Guinea. It is still the same rod of iron. Leftist or conservative, the tag really does not matter. He is one of the world's half dozen most single-minded tyrants and there is no good reason for dealing with him.

A Letter From Colombo: The West Seeks Re-election

COLOMBO, Sni Lanka — Voters in this Indian Ocean island nation of 15 million people will soon trek to the polls to elect a president for the first time.

The campaign is in high gear. The airwaves fairly crackle with spirited propaganda from the six candidates each of whom has been allotted free time on the state-owned radio and television broadcasting system. Neighborhood plazas are thickened in the evening by residents out to cheer or jeer political speeches. Col-orful bauners festoon the trees of this languid capital city, and posters de-corate many lamp posts.

There seems to be a preponderance of detailed political literature handed out by shirt-sleeved volunteers at street corners - a reflection of the 90-percent literacy rate in Sri Lanka, possibly the highest in the developing world. Readers of these pamphlets and of political newspapers are con-spicuous on sidewalks, in tea parlors, even on the long stretches of beach.

The man to beat in this election is the incumbent, President Junius R. Jayewardene, a tall, 76-year-old patrician with a cadaverous face, a gentle smile and a no-nonsense style that critics characterize as harsh and grating. Five years ago, he transformed Sri Lanka's British-influenced parliamentary system into an American-style presidential one, and, to opposi-tion accusations of despotism, promoted himself from prime minister to president. Now he wants a full sixyear term in his own right.

It is not only his performance in office that is being judged by Sri Lankans. The key issue in this election, to be held Oct. 20, is whether the Westem-style capitalist economic system that Mr. Jayewardene boldy introduced five years ago has worked here. And a larger question is raised: Is a Western-style free enterprise system relevant to the developing world?

Mr. Jayewardene has compiled an impressive record: The unemployment rate has been brought down in five years from 40 percent to 15 percent, and new jobs are being created in a "free trade zone" where Western.

By Pranay Gupte

Japanese and Hong Kong companies are setting up factories to produce shoes, clothes and electronics.

The shops are stocked with con-sumer goods, a contrast to the seven years of austere socialism that preceded the Jayewardene era when food rationing and acute shortages of daily necessities were common. Foreign trade, including the export of tea and rubber, is booming. More than 100,000 units of housing are being completed in Colombo alone, and electrification of Sri Lanka's 25,000 villages is progressing swiftly.

The per capita income has edged past $300. The annual growth rate is almost 6 percent. Sri Lanka enjoys good relations with Western donors. particularly the Umted States. The island-state now receives more U.S. assistance per person than any other country in Asia, a total of more than $100 million each year. Total economic assistance from the West is nearly $1 billion annually. The 35 Americans in the mission here of the U.S. Agency for International Development form a larger group than do their counterparts in either India or Pakistan, both of which also benefit from American largesse. The Reagan administration has heaped praise on the free-market orientation of Mr. Jayewardene's de-velopment policies, and American diplomats say that what is happening in Sri Lanka could well serve as a model for economic development in the Third World. Mr. Jayewardene told me in a recent series of interviews that his country's experience offered a useful lesson on how a developing state with meager resources and an uneven economic record could work productive ly with the West in the cause of rapid economic development. He emphasized that this economic cooperation has not resulted in the abandonment of Sri Lanka's traditional nonalignment, which is taken as an article of thrust at his socialist predecessor, Prime Minister Strimavo Ban-daranaike. "I have found it far better to think always in practical terms - about how things can be done, about how problems can be solved. One of our banes in the developing world is slogans, and too many of us mouth slogans and wind up doing very little for our people, whose cause we claim to uphold." Although Mr. Jayewardene charac-terizes himself as a pragmatist, his rhetoric is unabashedly capitalist — a bold position in the Third World, where socialist shibboleths are almost universally the fashion, no matter how unproductive a record socialist leaders accumulate. Marxism is a special bête noire of Mr. Jayewardene. "I just don't think the Marxist philosophy is relevant to the world today," he says. "I have never been convinced that, either in theory or practice, Marxism can be followed successfully. In countries where it is the official doctrine, things where it is the oursay to developing are in a mess. I feel that in developing countries, leaders should rethink the policies and see how they can adapt to changing world conditions." Political opponents of Mr. Jay-ewardene, such as Mrs. Bandaranaike who was barred by the courts from seeking public office for seven years after being found guilty of misusing power during her stewardship of this nation - charge that through the unabashed pursuit of capitalism, the esident has in effect mortgaged Sn Lanka to the West, making it a pawn of the United States.

President Jayewardene angrily denies such charges, citing his repeated opposition to the presence of foreign naval armadas in the Indian Ocean and to his having ruled out the possibility of granting the United States a naval base at Trincomales.

On the other hand, he told me that he wants to encourage port visits by American, Soviet and other ships becanse these visits generate much-needed income for Sri Lanka. Implic-"I do not believe in ideology," said needed income for Sri Lanka, Implic-Mr. Jayewardene, in an undisguised it in Mr. Jayewardene's comments is Activity.

the position that his country needs economic aid — and that the most ready donors are Western. Will Mr. Jayewardene win the election? Under the 1978 constitution he helped fashion, a president must obtain 51 percent of the vote, and independent analysts in Colombo say that this may be difficult for him to do. The leftists' opposition to strength-ened ties with the United States seems to have struck a responsive chord in some rural areas and in the poorer sections of Colombo.

Some critics note that the Jayewar dene free-enterprise policies have added to existing economic disparities in this country and have promoted corruption on a large scale. (The president said he was "dealing with these things in a firm and forthright fashion.")

Critics also point to the country's 40-percent inflation rate, something that Mr. Jayewardene says is an inev itable consequence of the overheating of the economy because of the dramatic change in economic policies. Sri Lankans traditionally have booted out every sitting government that has run for re-election; but the 168-member national Parliament where Mr. Jayewardene's United Na-tional Party enjoys a five-sixths ma-jority, is not up for re-election until

The opposition seems to be in disarray, and with Mrs. Ban-daranaike hors de combat, Mr. Jayewardene's prospects may be healthier. But I got the impression that he was uneasy about what could happen on Oct. 20. One senior Western diplomat summed up the situation this way:

Mr. Jayewardene is the candidate, but it is the West that is running for re-election. International Herold Tribune. The writer, a journalist with broad

ARTS/LEISURE

Jonathan Miller Updates 'Rigoletto' mafioso, and Sparafucile as a waterfront bar owner and hit man.
Under Miller's theater-wise guidance, with mgeniously contrived stage groupings and movements, this "Rigoletto" comes across, curiously but successfully, more as Broadway musical than as Italian opera. All the big numbers are there, and very well sung, but so integrated into the progress of the drama that they do not emerge and stand out on their own as tours-deforce of vocal prowess. Thus one felt the applause that greeted the numbers as intrusive. Verdi would probably have approved. An opera buff, while acknowledging and admiring the in-tent and the accomplishment, could feel a bit put off by the shift of emphasis from the traditional sequence of show-stoppers.

John Rawnsley's Rigoletto is vocally magnificent, but dramatically a bit too restless and sufficiently emphasize his deformity. A gimpy leg is no substitute for a hunched back. Arthur Davies sings well, but plays Duke rather too likably. Marie McLaughlin offers a secure and affecting Gilda, though her voice is not quite pretty enough. John Tomlinson's Sparafucile is an admirably sinister characterization.

Mark Elder, the conductor, paces the score vell, and restrains his orchestra in such a way that much of James Fenton's excellent transla tion comes through. This is a triumph for Milwho is retiring from the theater to return to the medical profession — and already a solid hit for the English National Opera.

Combining Writing With Other Full-Time Jobs

By Enid Nemy New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Maybe it isn't true, but it seems as though most of the world could and would write a book, if only they had the time. The problem, according to the thousands who have never managed to translate the perfect story tucked away in their heads into words, is that there just aren't enough hours in the day.

How, they sak, can they manage to write when they have a full-time job, family and social obligations, and when little extras keep cropping up that demand attention? It's impossible, they conclude, and ossible, they conclude, and with a sigh of relieved justification, they postpone their epics to the in-definite future.

The fact is that it is not impossible. There are men and women who have careers and family life. cope with the unexpected, and somehow, with it all, write novels that get published. They are not superhuman, and they have not learned to stretch 24 hours into 30, but they do have a secret. They sit down and write. Most of the men and women who are part-time authors, a group that includes a physics professor, doctor, lawyer, beauty expert and advertising executive, spend a good many of their free hours on research, writing, revising and editresearch, writing, revising and editing. This means, they all agree, that a prime requisite for their time-consuming second profession is an understanding family.

"Writing fiction is a kind of escape," said Lois Wyse, the president of Wyse Advertising who has written 45 books in 20 years. "If word don't have recoole in your life.

you don't have people in your life who will let you escape when you want to, it's impossible."

One or two of the men and women work at night and at odd intervals during the day, if their schedules allow, and all of them write on weekends. This can mean 3 to 8 or 10 hours each Saturday and Sunday. For some, the work is entertaining and relaxing; for others, it's hard but fulfilling.
"It's not work, it's contextainment for me," said L. Christian Bolling, a professor of physics and a researcher in atomic physics at the University of New Hampshire, whose second novel of espionage and intrigue, "Fourth Shot," will be released by Little, Brown later this year. "I like reading, but when I write, I can make it come out the way I want."

"You can give in to idleness or do something constructive," said Dr. David Shobin, an obstetrician gynecologist in Smithtown, York, who often scribbles the arrival of patients' babies. His first novel, "The Unborn," .came out almost two years ago; his current novel, "The Seeding," has just been published by the Linden Press division of Simon &

"The more I do, the more I can do," said Shirley Lord, whose first novel, "Golden Hill," will be published by Crown this month, Lord, writing the book, is director of spe-cial projects, beauty and fitness at Vogue, runs a New York apartout socially an average of four nights a week. While she was writ-ing the book, she had three dinner parties, each for 22 guests, and one party for 90 guests in New York, and four weekends of entertaining at her weekend home.

For Arthur R.G. Solmssen, a Harvard graduate who has practiced corporate and sccurities law in Philadelphia for almost 30 years, writing fiction is like watching a movie inside your head — people are talking to you, and you've got to get it down." Solmssen, whose fifth novel, "A Princess in Berlin," was published by Little, Brown in 1980, does

"Writing isn't very relaxing, but it's very satisfying," said Solmssen, who, despite his schedule, often thinks of himself as undisciplined. Lois Wyse's hooks were written during the same period she started an advertising agency in Cleveland with her former husband, commuted to New York and raised two children. She now runs the New York office of the agency, which bills $50 million a year. Earlier this year she married Lee Guber, the Although she began by writing children's books, she now alternates between poetry and novels about women in business. Her latest novel, "The Granddaughter," dealing with women in real estate, was published last year by St. Mar-tin's Press, and she is in the process of "thinking out" a new novel. "My business life feeds my fantasy life, and my fantasy life feeds my business life," she said. As with most of the writers,

Wyse carries a little notebook everywhere. It's even carefully placed outside the shower, in case inspira-tion strikes as the water is running. Her concentrated work is accomplished on weekends, three hours each day. After reading the newspapers and a leisurely breakfast, she moves into "a room of my own where I can work." "It takes an enormous amount of energy to write, and I can be a clean slate early in the morning," she said.

Bolling, who is married and has two young daughters, started writing as a lark, "and then the lark became serious," he said. It is now sufficiently serious to take up a good many of his weekends, cight hours each Saturday and Sunday when he's writing and several when he's writing, and several hours each weekend during the planning and research stage.

ONDON — Richard Eyre's three current produc-tions on the National Theatre's Olivier and Cot-tesloe stages — "Guya and Dolls," "The Beggar's Op-era" and now "Schweyk in the Second World War" might not appear to have much in common besides a good deal of cross-casting. But it was Kenneth Tynan who pointed out that "Guys and Dolls" was the "Beggar's Opera" of Broadway and Brecht who, jealous of Kurt Weill's success with "September Song," desper-ately wanted "Schweyk" to be a Broadway musical hit. What Eyre is doing is, in other words, a lot of tmusual Broadway, and good luck to him.

The notion of a Broadway Brecht does not of course lie easily alongside the doctrinaire theories of a puritanical East German socialist theatrical reformer, which is why you will find the idea tactfully avoided in most Brechtian textbooks; but as newly published Brecht correspondence indicates, the original notion was for Brecht and Weill, both exiles in the United States in 1943, to recreate their "Threepenny Opera" partnership with a smash hit musical for New York. Contractual and financial disagreements, prompted not least by Brecht's feeling that Well (having got to New York before him and enjoyed a couple of hit musicals there) had stolen an unfair lead, meant that Weill fell by the wayside and the "Schweyk" score is by Hanns Eisler. But there are nonetheless moments in both the writing and Eyre's splendidly inventive production when the showbez origins thine through in neon, not least during Schweyk's eccentrically Chap-linesque dance routine with a larger-than-life Hitler

How Morgan helps treasurers make money in today's tough money markets

Four of the Morgan officers who solved a client's long-term financing problem with a foreign currency borrowing privately placed and hedged into U.S. dollars. From lett. Jonathan Seem, head of the bank's Far West Department; Maureen Hendricks, International Financial Management; Robert Engel, Executive Vice President and Treasurer; Bruno Eberli, Foreign Exchange Trading.

Succeeding in world financial markets may be even tougher tomorrow than it is today. The choices are multiplying. The risks are rising. The rules—and rates—keep changing. Now, more than ever, corporate treasurers need up-to-the-minute money-market information, sound advice, timely execution. And ideas.

Any bank can lend you money at a rate. At The Morgan Bank we try to add value. How? By coming up with innovative solutions to short- or long-term financing needs. By understanding and anticipating developments in the world's money and capital markets. By helping you act in time.

Here's why treasurers of major multinationals increasingly turn to Morgan to achieve corporate funding and investing goals.

Morgan gives you experience. No bank knows more about the interrelated elements that affect financial markets—interest rate differentials, currency fluctuations, capital flows, central bank strategies. Around the world, around the clock, Morgan people exchange vital information and ideas. They learn what's going on, and so will you.

You'll get a global perspective—from the country-bycountry analyses of our international economists to interest rate and currency judgments by our foreign exchange specialists.

Morgan concentrates. We specialize in serving corporate, institutional, and government clients. And we've centralized all our money-market activities in our Treasurer's Division. Whether located in New York or in other world financial centers, our traders, analysts, and portfolio managers are close to their markets and in constant communication with each other. And their expertise is readily available to all our banking officers.

This unified approach gives Morgan and its clients more speed, more contact, more knowledge than ever before.

Morgan's needs parallel yours. Our treasurer needs to raise funds and invest for our bank just as you do for your company. Since our interests are alike, we use the same skills, data, and advanced technology to help you that we use to manage our own portfolio and worldwide positions.

Morgan is fast. You'll be impressed by how quickly we respond to your requests and make major commitments. That's because we know the sources and users of funds, how to gain access to them, and the best choices to meet your corporate needs. And we're not bound by red tape. Morgan officers have the authority to make decisions on their own, on the spot.

Morgan is a market-maker. We make markets in U.S. government and agency securities, money-market instruments, municipals, gold bullion, Eurobonds, foreign currencies.

The markets we make are large enough so that even our biggest clients can deal within them—and know that Morgan spreads will be among the most competitive they can find anywhere.

Morgan helps you manage liquidity. When you have surplus funds to invest we give you a choice of investment options that cover the full spectrum of moneymarket instruments. When you need money we provide competitive short-term credit for working capital and other purposes, in dollars and local currencies.

Morgan is good for the long term. Among the growing number of longer-term financing options we offer are loans for fixed assets and for project development. Morgan also arranges private placements in various currencies with U.S. and foreign investors. Through our London subsidiary, Morgan Guaranty Ltd, we're one of the fastest growing underwriters of fixed-rate, floating-rate, and convertible securities in the Eurobond market.

Morgan gives you ideas. Because The Morgan Bank makes major commitments as principal in both capital and foreign exchange markets, we can often help reduce the cost of your dollar and foreign currency financings. We can also show you how to reduce the effective costs of your total financing through efficient tax planning. We'll develop new ways to protect you against foreign exchange exposures. And we'll alert you to hedging and arbitrage opportunities.

Morgan is ready to help. Talk to the Morgan officer who serves your company, or write directly to Robert G. Engel, Executive Vice President and Treasurer, Morgan Guaranty Trust Company, 23 Wall Street, New York, New York 10015.

Bendix to Sell Diesel Engine Systems

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. — Cummins Engine Co. has said it will buy the heavy-duty portion of Bendix Corp.'s diesel-engine controls operation. It also said Bendix has licensed Cummins to produce a new electronical controls. cally controlled fuel injector that is patented by Bendix. Terms of the transaction were not disclosed.

Cummins said its fuel systems engineers have worked with the Bendix diesel engine controls group for the past two years in developing an electronically controlled fuel system. It said the agreement gives Conmins exclusive rights to the Bendix injector system for several types of

KLM to Reduce Work Force by 1985

AMSTERDAM — KLM Royal Dutch Airlines said it intends to reduce its work force to around 18,000 by 1985 from 19,000 at present. Most of the cuts will be made through attrition.

The reduction was announced as part of a series of measures aimed at improving productivity and efficiency to meet anticipated slow growth

Although the company has shown profits in the past three years, its income remains too low to finance necessary investment in coming years, airline officials said.

Kodak Sees Record Disc Deliveries

ROCHESTER, N.Y. - The Eastman Kodak Co. will have delivered eight million disc cameras to dealers around the world by the end of this year, the chairman, Walter A. Fallon, said Tuesday.

He said the figure is twice that of deliveries of Kodak 110 cameras over the first year in 1972, and three times that of first-year deliveries of Instamatic cameras in 1963.

Mr. Fallon also said Kodak is demonstrating at Photokina, an interna-onal photography exposition at Cologne, West Germany, a viden dis-layuant for the transfer of Kodak disc images to the television screen. Dow Sheds Early Gain; Volume Up

NEW YORK - Some late profit-taking caused prices on the New York Stock Exchange to close only slightly higher Tuesday despite strong gains earlier in the day.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose nearly 10 points in morning trading but changed direction in the afternoon and closed with a gain of only 3.58 to 907.19. Ad-vances led declines nine to five as volume swelled to some 75 million shares from 55.65 million Monday.

Chester Pado of G. Tsai & Co. said Tuesday's action was a "normal recovery attempt on the way down." He said the market still needs more corrective action after its sharp gains of August and Sep-tember and added that even if prices climb to the 920 level on the Dow average, they probably will still come down.

However, analysts said the bull market is far from over, and noted that volume has consistently been stronger when prices are going up rather than falling.

Some analysts suggested that many investors were encouraged by the market's ability to move forward despite a technically overbought condition.

Merger Battle Scarred Reputations Of Major U.S. Investment Banks

By Sandra Salmans New York Times Service

NEW YORK - In the world of mergers and acquiitions, it is conventional wisdom that - whatever the bankers always win. But the Martin Marietta-Bendix-Allied-United Technologies takeover wrangle, which has overturned many truisms, may have disproved

"The investment banking community has come out badly," said Felix G. Rohayto, a partner of Lazard Frères, investment bankers to United Technologies

On Wall Street, major players in the struggle are being described as inept, overreaching or opportunis-tic. Members of the financial community charge that some of the investment banks, which together earned nearly $20 million in fees, failed to foresee their opponents' strategy, miscalculated the impact of their own moves and carried on the takeover battle without worrying about casualties.

Salomon Brothers and First Boston Corp. were the bankers for Bendix Corp., and Lehman Brothers Kulm Loeb represented Allied Corp. The performance of Kidder, Peabody & Co., which represented Martin Marietta Corp., has also been questioned.

The takeover battle, which began in August with a bid by Bendix for Marietta and took an unexpected turn with counter-offers by Marietta and United Technologies for Bendix, ended on Sept. 24 with Allied's agreement to acquire Bendix.

By that time, however, Bendix had acquired 70 percent of Marietta, and Marietta owned about 50 per-cent of Bendix. Following a stock trade, Marietta will remain independent, but Allied will hold 38 percent of its stock.

Almost from the start, Bendix and Marietta were idely criticized for what was perceived as their heedless scramble to try to control each other at the possible risk of their mutual destruction. But members of the financial community, including some of the bankers involved, suggest that the investment bankers were

BP Plans to Drop More Than a Third Of Its Tanker Fleet

LONDON - BP Shipping, the owner of one of Britain's top three merchant fleets, announced Tues-day that it is cutting its tanker fleet 16 ships, or more than onethird, because of a surplus of world tanker tonnage and gloomy prospects for increased demand.

Three supertankers, four medium crude carriers and nine product carriers will be sold or scrapped by early 1983, said BP Shipping's managing director, Ronald Ilian. The cut will result in a loss of more than 1,300 jobs. Mr. Itian said in a statement that the company, a subsidiary of British Petroleum, had to get rid of the ships because cutbacks in oil consumption resulting from the world recession and conservation easures had created a surplus of tanker tonnage.

A spokesman for Lloyds Shipping said 403 tankers were laid up worldwide in September.

Mr. Ilian's statement said: "Current forecasts indicate that a shipping balance in the oil products trade is imlikely to be reached be-fore 1985 and that a similar position for [supertankers] is a further two to three years away.

"Against this gloomy background, which faces the whole of the industry, BP Shipping has decided that action must now be takon urgently to stem further deterioration of our own situation."

After the cuts, BP Shipping's fleet will consist of eight supertankers, four medium crude carriers now under construction in British shipyards and 17 product carriers - totaling about three million deadweight tons.
The National Seamen's Union

said it would fight the fleet cuts, which would mean a loss of 265 jobs for its members. The other jobs involved are those of 360 officers, 565 Indian seamen and 116 BP office staffers,

In Melbourne, a spokesman for British Petroleum of Australia said Tuesday that BP and Broken Hill Proprietary want to pull out of a planned deep-water petroleum search in the Great Australian Bight off South Australia, Reuters

The BP spokesman said about $2 million had been spent on seismic surveys since the companies were granted a six-year permit in mid-1980 but the results did not justify any further investment

OECD Gloomy On Europe Jobs

STRASBOURG, France — Unemployment in Europe is rising more rapidly than expected and the prospects for reversing the trend are poor, the leader of the 24-nation Organization for Economic Coop-eration and Development said

Speaking at the assembly of the Council of Europe, Emile van Lennep, secretary-general of the OECD, ruled out a return to full employment in the near future. He said that investment was dropping, but added that a successful fight against inflation could improve prospects for expansion.

Mr. van Lennep said that recent indicators showed the number of jobless was increas-ing rapidly. It is likely to ex-ceed 17.5 million unemployed by 1984, he said.

"The basic problem is that the excessive rise in real labor costs... has meant that there has not been enough investment and that such investment as has taken place has been unduly biased towards labor-saving as opposed to job creation,"

EC officials said Tuesday that the community is considering re-suming subsidized butter sales to the Soviet Union, Renters reported from Brussels. It said the community Executive Commission was to discuss on Wednesday a plan on resuming the exports.

The officials said Mr. Dalsager put forward the plan, despite opposition in West Germany and Britain, because of the dairy pro-duction surplus in EC nations. France also support the resumption of sales.

Third World Seeks Easing of Pact on Patents

neva, pitting the Reagan adminis-tration against the Third World and some Western allies. At issue is a proposal that would make it easier for developing coun-tries to confiscate patented inven-tions and manufacture them them-

The four-week UN conference will consider revising the Paris Convention of 1883, which allows patent bolders a commercial monopoly for their inventions in the 92 signatory countries, subject to certain conditions.

Third World governments, cager to speed their economic development by gaining easier access to modern technology, want provisions that give them the right to take over and manufacture on an exclusive basis any patented inven-tion if the original patent holder does not produce it in a given country within 30 months of re-

The Reagan administration, with backing from U.S., European and Japanese industry, strongly opposes such a change, saying it would give developing countries the right to expropriate inventors

U.S. officials also argue that the change would enshrine the principle of confiscation in international law. And they say the plan would burt Third World economic interests by making big companies more secretive about their inventions and reluctant to invest in developing countries that claimed a right to confiscate their patents.

"lt's tantamount to expropriation, and it's bad for the developmental process," said Michael Kirk, head of the international dision at the U.S. Office of Patents ty being considered at the UN tability on the abrogation of pat-ents," said Barry MacTaggart, chairman and president of the pharmacentical and chemical comany Pfizer International.

Under the Paris Convention

patent holders must publish details of their discoveries in the signatory countries for other scientists, to study. But no invention may be opied for profit.
The convention does allow member countries to give patented technology to a rival manufacturer if the original patent holder abuses neglecting to produce it.

Israel and Canada have used this provision to gain access to technology that the original patent holder refused to develop in those countries, according to officials of the World Intellectual Property Organization, the UN body that administers the Paris Convention.

After five years, a convention

Mexico to Delay Payment of Debt

By Alexander Nicoll

MEXICO CITY — Mexico expects to post-pone repayment of most debts which fall due next year, and estimates that even after such a deferral it will post a foreign exchange deficit of $5.33 billion, government figures released of $5.33 billion, government figures released Monday show.

According to the figures, Mexico's foreign-debt totaled $77.9 billion at the end of August, while interest payments are estimated at $12 billion in both 1982 and 1983.

The projections assume the government will repay $1.6 billion of principal next year, when of all debt falling due in 1983, medium and long-term public sector borrowings alone amount to $6.01 billion.

An estimate of the total amount of remains

An estimate of the total amount of principal, including the private sector, owed by Mexico and falling due in 1983, was not included in the figures.

But between Aug. 20 and Dec. 31 1982, total principal repayments amount to $21.88 billion, and interest to $4.41 billion.

Under a 90-day moratorium Mexico proposed on Aug. 20, when its liquidity crisis came to a head, it is currently repaying no principal to international banks, but the latter have not agreed to the extension of the deferral through 1983 that is assumed in the new figures.

The foreign exchange deficit of $5.33 billion forecast for 1983 compares with one of $8.90 billion estimated for 1982, of which $4.12 billion estim lion is projected for the final four months of hon is projected for the final four months of the year.

A note appended to the tables said the defi-cits for both years would be financed partially by official sources of credit. Banking sources noted that any portion not covered by official sources would have to be funded by new bor-rowing or other measures such as a reduction of imports.

Mexico has obtained $2 billion of emergen-cy funding from the U.S. streetment and a cy funding from the U.S. government and a $1.85 billion short-term credit agreement from international central banks to tide over its liquidity crisis.

quidity crisis.

In addition, it is currenctly negotating a $3.9 billion credit from the International Monetary Fund. If an agreement is reached, under an extended fund facility, Mexico would have $1.52 billion available by the end of 1983 as well as $440 million to $880 million under the fund's compensatory financing facility.

ZURICH — The 564 banks and financial institutions in Switzerland recorded a rise in profit in 1981, but the increase was lower than in 1980, the National Bank reported Tuesday.

Combined profit amounted to 2.6 billion Swiss francs ($1.18 billion), an increase of 8.4 percent. This compared to a 17-percent rise

FRANKFURT — West Germany's banking supervisory office has asked banks for a detailed breakdown of their lending exposure to individual countries, a spokesman for the office in West Berlin said Tuesday.

Bankers said the request reflected growing concern at the supervi-sory office and at the Bundesbank over payment problems of countries such as Poland and Mexico.

The request was made to about 40 banks in a circular dated Sept. 27, the spokesman in West Berlin said. He said banks are being asked to provide exposure figures quarterly, daring from last July. 4, for all countries, together with the portion covered by the govern-

Mr. Friedrichs said that losses from AEG-Telefunken's decision to seek a court settlement with its creditors can be absorbed by the bank without having to draw on hidden reserves this year,

The parent bank's partial opera-ting profit in the first half, excluding results of trading operations on its own account, rose 41.4 percent to 392 million marks, Mr. Friedrichs said. He said at a news briefing that it was too early to forecast dividend payment on 1982.

He also said Tuesday that Po-land's Western creditor banks will seek to put future debt rescheduling agreements on a longer-term

Mr. Friedrichs noted that the rescheduling of Polish debt so far had been based on two agreements of one year each, covering amounts falling due in 1981 and 1982. Future agreements could cover payments due over three to four years, he said.

The verdict on Kidder's role in the takeover battle depends largely on the perception of how Marietta has emerged. Mr. Siegel views it as a triumph, and champagne corks popped at Kidder headquarters Sept. 27 in celebration.

Honeywell advanced technology gives higher yield with fewer Btu's

One of Europe's largest refinenes simultaneously doubled motor fuel output and reduced energy costs 25 % with our control technology.

Advanced technology is the key to reducing energy consumption in industry. in all types of heating processes and process control operations. In fact, only new microelectronic-, microprocessor- or computer-based controls can give you the precision and reliability you need to increase yield and decrease energy consumption.

Be it furnaces (coal, gas, oil, mixed or electric), ovens, kilns, boilers or any type of processing - from food to fibers, pulp and paper to plastics and petrochemicals, Honeywell offers you the advanced technology you need to keep production high and costs low.

Inexpensively, too. Studies show that in some cases the installation of new microelectronic controis can be amortized ten times faster than pre-1970 controls.

Saved energy is the cheapest and most readily available source of alternative energy. Honeywell advanced technology lets you tap this source effectively. Right now.

FUTURE WEATHER AND THE GREENHOUSE EFFECT

By John Gribbin. 246 pp. $15.95. Delacorte Press/ Eleanor Friede, 1 Dag Hammarskjöld Plaza New York, N.Y. 10017.

Reviewed by David Burns

THIS IS a fine account of the natuand constantly interacting — that cause the vagaries of daily weather, and destructive events such as droughts, floods and extremes of heat and cold. It explains the growing rec-ognition of the role in human affairs. of climate and climatic variability, and concern about possible global climate change. Gribbin, an astrophysicist, is the author of "Forecasts, Famines and Freezes" and a dozen other books of popular science. He shows that climatic patterns follow many cycles, some on geologic time scales, and that "normal" and "climate" must be defined: What area? What time period? A Necessary Perspective

Gribbin cites studies ranging from paleobotany to volcanic dust veils, and gives considerable attention to sunspots — though their link with cli-mate is still elusive. His sketch of climate is still clusive. His sketch of cu-matic history provides a necessary perspective. Variations in Earth's or-bit around the sun can trigger ice ages, and he cites evidence that the present warm "inter-glacial" age may be coming to an end: Over the next 10,000 years we may enter a new ice

His outline of the dynamics of nat-ural change is useful in considering man-made "forcing" ---- such as the steady buildup of carbon dioxide.

Earth's climate and atmosphere set it apart and make the planet a pleasant oasis in the cosmic void. Life is possible because we have water, a blanket of life-supporting gases and a climate that is neither too warm nor too cold. Man may now be altering this equable climate by adding carbon dioxide to the atmosphere. This could make the climate warmer than at any time in human history.

Carbon dioxide makes up only a tiny fraction of the atmosphere, but its importance far exceeds its relative scarcity. It is essential for photosynthesis, which converts the sun's energy into forms usable by plants and an-mals. It also helps regulate the vitally important heat balance. Water vapor and carbon dioxide act as a one-way screen, trapping part of the sun's heat and making the Earth's surface warmer than it otherwise would be. This is the so-called "greenhouse ef-

Studies of oeighbor planets confirm the existence, nature and magnitude of the greenhouse effect, and the critical role of the atmosphere. On Mars, water is present only as ice, and its thin atmosphere allows most of the sun's energy to escape back into space. Mars is consequently a frozen desert. On Venus, however, the atmosphere is 96 percent carbon dioxide, and all its water is vaporized by the sun's heat. There, a "runaway" greenhouse pushes surface temperatures to nearly 500° C.

Bot man is changing the atmosphere, mainly by burning large quantities of oil, gas and coal, releasing carbon dioxide. We can only guess how much fossil fuel we may burn in the future. This will depend on many factors, including rates of population and econo growth, energy conser vation and the development of nonfossil energy sources. We do know that carbon dioxide has increased by about 8 percent since careful measure ment began in 1958, and by about 20 percent in a hundred years.

Mathematical models indicate that if these trends continue, we can expect an increase of about three degrees centigrade in average, world tempera-ture sometime in the next century. A few degrees doesn't sound like much compared with the daily and seasonal fluctuations, but a small change in average temperature can have a surprisingly large effect on the global cli-mate. On the human time scale, the change would seem irreversible.

A warmer Earth would mean more active water cycle — more evap-oration and more rainfall. But these changes would not be evenly distrib-uted: Some areas would become wetter; others, such as parts of the U.S. grain belt, might become drier. A carbon dioxide-induced climate shift could cause significant regional changes in world agricultural produc-

In the past, man responded to climate change by moving to more suitable locations. Today, population growth and political boundaries make mass migration difficult. The climate may shift, but people may not be able to follow.

Modern societies are so finely modern societies are so introprinted that any change could be disruptive, with possibly serious social consequences. Over time, man could consequences. Over time, man could adapt to a new climate regime. But the dislocations could be difficult and costly, even though the climate of some regions might improve. A global climate change could have the biggest environmental "impact" of all.

The carbon dioxide issue is full of troubling uncertainties. For one thing natural climatic variability is so large we may have to wait a decade or two before the predicted "signal" of a carbon dioxide-warming emerges clearly from the background "noise." Ewn though the potential impacts are vast we cannot precisely predict their timing, magnitude or location. But the uncertainties that make the question difficult do not make it less uppent difficult do not make it less urgent.

Gribbin says there is no economica way to prevent the carbon dioxide buildup. Rather than searching for a "techno-fix," we should use the time and resources available to understand better the urgent problems of food and energy. Climate has always changed, he says, and it always will Understanding past changes will help reduce vulnerability to unfavorable climates of the future. He sees a possible carbon-dioxide greenhouse as another in an endless series of inevitable and normal fluctuations. The difference may be that this is a change we can dimly at least, foresee. Perhaps we can prepare.

David Burns is director of the Climate Project of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. He wrote this review for The Washington Post.

ON the diagramed deal, West allowed herself to fall into a trap, after her partnership had judged well in the bidding.

Whether East should open with one diamond or one club with 5-6 distribution is a clear point.

bution is a close point. Most experts would probably bid one diamond, treating the hand as 5-5 rather than run the risk of being unable to bid diamonds.

Clearly, the hand is not strong enough to bid one club and then make a strength-showing reverse in dia-

East chose one club, and could say no more when his opponents bid briskly to four spades and West bid hearts. As it happens, no game is available for either side, so East-West was right not to bid further. At many tables, East-West played in a minor-suit game and were defeated by two tricks, sometimes doubled.

In four spades, it seems that South is doomed to lose two club tricks and a trick in each major suit. Clubs were led and continued, and South ruffed the third round with the ten. West should have overruffed with the ace, since there was no particular reason not to take that trick immediately. However, she discarded a diamond, which was not in itself fatal.

Next South led a low trump and West failed to see the danger. She played low just in case her partner held a singleton king, but this was a remote possibility, for South would hardly have jumped to two spaces with a six-card suit headed by the ten When the spade queen won in the dummy. South was in control. See finessed the diamond queen successfully, took the ace and led her last distance.

mond. If West had ruffed, she would have had to lead from the heart king so she discarded. This did not save her, however, for after ruffing the diamond in dumny Sout led a trump. West had to win and lead a heart, allowing South to score her queen and the contract.

Well-Oiled Oilers the Best of the West

NEW YORK - In one of Tuesday three opening-night games in the 1982-83 National Hockey League season, the Edmonton Oilers were to play provincial rival Calgary. Calgary's Johnson may wish he were back coaching at the University of Wisconsin rather than deal-ing with the complaining and in-consistency the Flames were known for last year. But at least Kent Nilsson returns to health and probably to a spot among the scoring leaders — and Mel Bridgman (33-54/87), Lanny McDonald (40-42/82) and Guy Chouinard (23-57/80) are no slouches. Don Edwards might play ever game in goal — he'd like to — but with Panl Reinhart as the team's only reliable defenseman, he might think twice about it before too

Norris Division

Two seasons ago, Minnesota surprised everyone by storming to the cup finals. Last spring the North Stars fell flat, upset by Chicago in the playoffs.

But this is a solid team to which Lou Name, a gambling general manager, has added high-scoring junior Brian Bellows. Bobby Smith (43-71/114), Dino Ciccarelli (55-52/107), Neal Broten (38-59/97 in 73 games) and Steve Payne (33 goals) are explosive up front — and Craig Hartsburg, Gordie Roberts and Brad Maxwell can score frem defense.

Another club that prefers to ok past last season to 1980-81 is St. Louis. The Blues wound up second overall two years ago, but crashed to a divisional tie for third last year.

Mike Liut (28-28-7) is a superh goalie, but the Swiss-cheese defense needs shoring up for him to he at his best. The attack is firstrate behind Bernie Federko (30-62/92), Brian Souter (39-36/75), Joey Mullen (59 points in 45 games), Jorgen Pettersson (38 goals) and Wayne Babych.

Tony Esposito finally may be supplanted as Chicago's No. 1 goalie by Murray Bannerman. Denis Savard (32-87/119), Norris Trophy winner Doug Wilson (39-46/85), Al Secord (44 goals), Tom Lysiak (32-40/82) and Darryl Sutter, if healthy, will lead a potent offense.

The Italian Connection of Gencral Manager Jimmy Devallano and Coach Nick Polano should return Detroit to the playoffs, if not to respectability. All the Red Wings have to do is beat out Toronto, and they should be able to do so - with expected improve-ment from Reed Larson, John Ogrodnick and Mark Osborne and with decent goaltending from Gilles Gilbert

If defensemen Borje Salming stays interested; if goalie Vincent Tremblay gets better; if kids like Bob McGill, Jim Benning and top draftee Gary Nyland play near to their potentials; if Rick Vaive scores 54 goals again — then To-route might just escape the cellar. But don't count on it.

Familiar sight: Wayne Gretzy, having zipped another one past an NHL goalie, receiving congratulations from an Oiler teammate.

Black Monday — and a Bright Day for England

VT SELLERS LONDON — Monday was a color iss black day in England for the Ku players." exciting young black players were named to a national soccer squad.

ing racist mail some of us began to receive from the so-called Knights of the Invisible Empire for observations that the hour would surely come when England, like Brazil. fielded a troly integrated side. That a new international manager should declare his hand and point up the future so clearly is surprising only because it em-phasizes how quickly attitudes have changed. Precisely seven years ago I canvassed 14 leading soccer managers to ask why the prominence of blacks in Britain's wastelands, and on school and parks teams, was not reflected in the professional leagne. The aston-ishing reply, from 12 of the 14, was that black players lacked "bottle." The term is soccer jargon for cour-

Robson will doubtless receive chilling evidence of that in his mailbox. One letter, quite likely postmarked North London but using American letterhead, will begin, "Nigger Lover: ... Watching you every day." It will urge that we "resettle all Negroes in their African homeland" and will conclude that "you have been visited by the Kn Klux Klan." The trash bin awaits such mail. Meanwhile, it so happens that the majority of Robson's newcomers have direct descendants in the West Indies which, undeniably, can supply the spontaneity and fluidity of movement the soccer world could see were missing in the organized but predictable Eng-lish side that failed at the World

Watford, like Luton newly promoted to the first division, provides two of the new boys, both born in Jamaica. Luther Blissett, son of a carpenter, has been close to selection for some time, but his partner, John Barnes, reflects the phenomenal rise of youth.

Barnes is 18, a left winger of lithe elasticity, gifted with the acceleration to spurt past defenders. instincts to go for goal. His father, son may wish to be, but his choice who played for Jamaica in 1967, for the squad now preparing to taught him; when Barnes senior was posted to London as military attache in 1976, the soccer dream took root. Last March, the teenager rejected an England youth cap, feeling be had at least a year to make up his mind where his international allegiance lay.

The call to England's under-21 last month — and now the quick promotion — have settled that, although Barnes's father, a colonel, is back home in Kingston.

The black Stanley Matthews might seem an apt label for Barnes, except that it has already been bestowed on the sixth black player called up by Robson. Mark Chamberlain, 19. probably has more right to the "compliment," as he sees it: He is a right winger, he snakes past fullbacks with a body swerve reminsion to the maestro and two months ago was transferred to Stoke City, one of Sir Stanley's old clubs. Chamberlain, born the too of Cup. Jamaican parents) near Stoke, has To locals who support Luton had a meteoric rise. Until his Town, Ricky Hill is "the black £150,000 (about $252,000) transfer from Port Vale, he was a fourth division novice. Now, after eight games in the top flight, he is England material. Hill is a Londoner, born in Paddington of Jamaican parents.

Each of these players knows about turning the other cheek. As blacks in a British society, they less gifted friends to find jobs and to hear new echoes of calls for repatriation. Yet John Barnesdismisses the theory of the hungry black succeeding through sports:

"I don't see myself as different to white players," he announces with all the assurance of his 18 years. "We get the same chance."
At least his world, then, has improved since that of the late Jesse Owens, who once observed: "If the black athlete has been better than his white counterpart, it's because be's hungrier - he wants it more."

Does he? In all the interest this Mahbutt has almost been overlooked. Mabbutt's climb to the England team has been as swift as Chamberlain's. Until the summer he was languishing with Bristol Rovers, a 20-year-old whose versatility drew the eye but whose dis-betes frightened off the top clubs.

£105,000, and Mabbutt has been a revelation ever since. The least surprised man in England is his father Ray, a former pro. Mabbutt senior recalls Gary, then 11, pestering him for a color television set. When you can bounce a football 100 times on your right foot, 100 times on your left foot and 100 times on your head without once letting it touch the ground, then I'll go out and buy a color television," said dad. Exactly one week later, the boy had something to show his father. He had mastered the routine and be won his color TV. Another child of our times.

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK - I'm tired of advice on love and of books and lectures and television panelists who preach the wonder of love and how to make love to women, men, animals, plants and diningroom furniture and the joy that comes of loving all humanity. Love is nice, love is swell, and I'm in favor of it, but these love bores constantly telling us, "Love is everything," are creating a terrible distortion of emotional values.

What about anger? Why don't any of these experts on human notion tell us something useful about anger?

Pick up any day's newspaper, and there it is: "Angered Parent Kills Spouse and Four Children"; "Angered by Firing, Man Slays
10"; "Angry Son Mails Mom a Letter Bomb"; "Angered Citizen
Punches Supreme Court Justice." and on and on. It's senseless to say the problem with these people is that they don't know how to love.

When you're angry, as these people are, you don't want some-body shoving Leo Buscaglia's "Living Loving and Learning" or Michael Morgenstern's "How to Make Love to a Woman" under

What we need is not another volume on "How To Make Love" but some foolproof advice on "How To Make Anger.

l was struck by the lack of sound advice on the subject when, one day this summer, I found myself shouting and pounding the desk in front of an airline clerk because a flight had been oversold and he refused to permit standing in the airplane aisles.

Fortunately for the airline clerk, I am one of those odd Americans who never carry a sawed-off shotgun or even a handgun, so he was able to sneer at my rage with impunity. Fortunately for the passengers who were not being left be-hind, none approached me with counsel on the joys of loving, for I was furious enough to kick luggage to pieces with tennis shoes.

* * * What still burned in my soul after a sedative four hours in the airport waiting lounge was the utter calm with which the officious devil at the airline desk ignored my show of anger. I realized he must have seen anger in all its forms, including the great masters of rage so skilled at outrage that he had by, sullenly, quaked, gone aboard airplanes to haul off passengers already seated and given their places to those of whose anger he stood in awe.

I was not one deserving such respect. He had seen thousands like me. The trembling voice, the pur-ple face, the bulging eyeballs, the quivering hands. He had sized me up perfectly, had said to himself. tterly ineffectual when abused by airline, hotel and car-rental clerks; hasn't the slightest notion how to make anger, can be easily crushed by my calm, superior man-ner which I shall use to give him a twist of the knife by showing that not only do I not love him, I don't n respect him. Because the Leo Buscaglias and the Michael Morgensterns of the world have concentrated solely on improving my competence at love, I can find no useful tips on how to sharpen my competence at being angry with airline clerks.

Because of this weakness, over the years I have found it wiser to confine my expressions of anger to long bouts of sullenness and sulking. Once the people with whom you're angry — a wife, say, or a child — notice you are sulking their curiosity will stimulate ques-

"All right, what are you sulking about this time?" Answer (very sullenly voiced): "I'm not sulking."

"Of course you're sulking. You've been sulking for days. Now get it off your chest." The one thing you mustn't do at this point is get it off your chest. This is not a friendly invitation, but a trap designed by the other party to make your voice tremble, your face turn purple and your eyeballs bulge.
"How childish," the object of your anger can then say, luxuriating in the sense of being calm, unchildish and superior to a person whose anger is so incompetently expressed.

All I can recommend is continued sulking, and I recommend it with grave reservations. Years of quiet sulking, whether at a wife, a child or an airline clerk, often builds up a residue of poison which calcifies into hate, and we all know what an unhappy effect hate has on love, don't we?

There will probably be a new book about it published soon. "Love Your Way Out of the Sulks," Just thinking about it makes me grind my molars, quiet-

Alvin Ailey

After Countless Setbacks, 'Yearning to Be Perfect Is What Dance Is All About,' Choreographer Says

By Michael Kernan Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — Alvin Ai-W ley, having breakfast at Howard Johnson's, had just finished reading reviews of his dance company's opening night here. Respectful and serious, the judgments ranged from "vibrant original vision" to "engaging if modest achievements" to clunker." He growled for a while and ordered scrambled eggs. Then he laughed.

"I like a discerning audience," he said. "I don't care if everybody falls on their face at every piece, like Broadway. This isn't the Hit Parade." He hates the Broadway everybody's-gotta-love-it mentality. He's been there. He spent all of 1969 working on a musical version of the film "La Strada," tried out in Detroit for five weeks, opened and closed in one night on Broadway. Never again. Most of his 51 years, it seems, he has been trying to escape labels. Twenty-one years ago he choreographed a great ballet called "Revelations," based on spirituals and black folk music, and it electrified everyone who saw it. And still does. "It follows me around every-where," he said. "I've done it every season except one, when I just couldn't put up with it anymore and dropped it, but my board of directors said it sells tickets so put it back."

He smiled quietly. "I've learned to like it." But Ailey is interested in what he's doing now. He has moved far beyond his original idea of a far beyond an original lites of a black folkloric troupe. A brilliant choreographer himself, he also has a dozen choreographers working for him, and he creates dances to George Gershwin and Steve Reich and Duke Ellington and Bartók, and is rescuing mod-ern classics by Ted Shawn, José Limón, Lester Horton, Doris Humphrey and others.

"People always say, 'Oh, what's he doing now, Bartok? It's not his trip. Why doesn't he give us another "Revelations"? Esoteric works I like, yes, but I want to mix em with works that have immediate appeal. My back-ground being black contributes to that, our jazz, folk songs, blues and spirituals reach out to people, so people called us commer-cial. We're still accused of being commercial because of jazz. In America, that is. Europe respects

Ailey: "I like a discerning audience."

Another thing: His company makes a point of being multira-cial. The black heritage is still there, but Ailey is trying to speak to a universal audience. The critics put you in a bag, they say only black people can do that, only black people can do the blues. Give us a break We're 20th-century Americans."

Born to a farm family in Rogers, Texas, ("Nothing but a gas station and a church"), he soaked up blues and spirituals firsthand. At 12 he found himself in Los Angeles, a big kid, interested in gymnastics and football.

"One day I followed a most heartiful annual followed a most beautiful young lady to the Les-ter Horton dance studio in Hollywood. I'd been turned on by the whole idea that black culture could be put on the stage this way, could be dignified."

Horton, a white dance pioneer who was interested in Indian and Oriental and other ethnic dance styles, died in 1953, and Ailey became the company's choreogra-pher, costume designer and direc-tor, producing a number of rather imitative works over the next year. Then he got a call from New York, to dance in a musical of Truman Capote's "House of Flowers" along with Carmen de Lavallade, the beautiful young lady who had first lured him to

He plunged into concerts and classes with Martha Graham, Limón, Humphrey, Charles Weidman and others. He danced in a few musicals, then appeared in "Jamaica" with Lena Horne: "I decided right then that what I wanted to do was make dances," he said. "I pulled together a group of dancers from 'Jamaica' and from my schools and courses and gave a concert in New York in '58. There were seven of us. We're still at it." Surely no American dance the ater has disbanded as often as Alvin Ailey's. "We'd rehearse six months for a performance at the Y, all for that one night, and that was it. All that energy and zeal and love." After every concert, the dancers scattered to the winds. Nobody got paid, of course. They did one concert in '58, two in '59, three in '60. And in '61 they went to the Jacob's Pillow festival in Massachusetts. "The State Department saw us there. That got us a five-month tour of Southeast Asia and kind of established us as a group and kept us together for the first time. We went to the Rio arts festival where we met European impresarios, had a three-week season in Paris, a great success, and a six-week season in London in

'64, and after that we were mvited back to Europe every year."
The company was still dissolving after every season. But gradually things got better. Today it has a $4.5 million budget, 30 members, and a repertoire of 50 ballets by at least 30 major choreographers. Plus: a second company, a third company, a scholarship program, a children's pro-gram and — Ailey's pet project —a dance course for the blind. "We make about 70 percent at the box office, and the rest has to be raised. We're running a mil-lion-dollar deficit, what with Reaganomics and all. We've cut back by $500,000 already, which means the elimination of some artistic excellence. It really curbs your fantasies. We have a genius who does our backdrops of pure light, but we'd love to have some scenery. And live music. And something more than minimal costumes. But the spirit of the dancers is great."

Based in New York, Alley nat-urally attracts many New York dancers, but others are from all over Long-legged Keith McDan-iel, whose sinuous dancing pops eyes in "Treading," was spotted at 16 in a Chicago dance class ("Look at that!" Ailey muttered at the time). He, like other soloists, also appears in the group.

"We're a rather democratic group, that way. No stars, no principals, no corps de ballet. Judy Jamison has gone off to Broadway, but she's still very much part of the family. Our dancers have a wonderful perception of themselves, a sense of who they are. A lot of choreographers have come out of our company; I'm proud of that."

Trained in classical ballet, and modern, and jazz, and the styles of Lester Horton ("a very broad, expansive technique that sort of goes ontside the body, very energetic, muscular, big lines"), Graham, Shawn and others, they have become Ailey dancers. You know them by the way they use everything: arms, feet, hips, heads, even their mass presence in plastic, multihuman shapes and by the pleasure they obvious ly take in their work.

"They'll be over there on the stage at 3 this afternoon," Alvin Alley said. "Trying to perfect to-night's program. Even now. Con-stantly seeking perfection. Trying to make something fine. Yearning to be perfect is what dance is loon crew, stymied in their first two attempts to float around the world, said they will try again with a new belium-filled balloon. There are records to be set and goals to be achieved for us," Maxie Anderson, 48. said in Albuquerque, New Mexico, where he lives. The last great frontier for the flights of balloons is the world." Anderson and Don Ida, 49, a tree-nursery owner from Longmont, Colorado, have targeted their launching for late October or early November, with a liftoff or early lines. Montans. The flight path would take the balloon and its gondola, which in all will weigh 15,700 pounds, across the northern United States, the northern Atlantic, Europe, the Mediterranean, the Middle East, India, China and the Pacific, Ida said. The two balloonists will use the same unpressur-ized gondols that they used in two unsuccessful attempts last year. In February 1981, the two attempted their first around-the-world flight with a takeoff from Luxor, Egypt. But that ended two days and 2,673 miles later when a leak forced them down in northern India. In December 1981, they lifted off from Japur, India, about 150 miles southwest of New Delhi, and landed about two hours later near Rainwal, India, Their balloon was riddled with holes because paint ate through the thin polyethylene skin, Anderson said.

Mark Thatcher, son of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain, called off a business trip to the United States Monday because of death threats, The Sun newspaper said. The 28-year-old racing driver was tipped off by Scotland Yard detectives of a murder plot by U.S. supporters of the Irish Reblican Army minutes before his flight, the paper said. Young Thatcher, who has a guard of two men because of earlier death threats, has supposedly upset Irish extremists in the United States with his comments about an alleged IRA gunmen facing extradition back to England. A spokesman for Thatcher's auto racing interests said the prime minister's son "probably got ill," but Thatch-er's private secretary told The Sun he was "definitely not ill. All we want to say is that he changed his mind at the last moment," she said, adding that he did not want his whereabouts known at present for security reasons. Princess Ame, who has been rumored to be having marital problems, denied press reports that she is pregnant. If told reporters who asked whether she was expecting a third child. "No whether she was expecting a third child: "No, you have a vivid image nation," Her husband, Mark Phys. lips, a former army captain turned farmer, smiled but said nothing Anne spoke to reporters as she cattered Guildhall, the center of civic government in the City of London, where she was to become an honorary Liveryman of the Worshipful Company of Carmen. The remors have been fueled by Anne's solo travels, which will continue when she tours Africa alone start. ing Oct. 22 as president of the Save-the Children Fund. 化二溴二唑二溴化
